BROOKE STEWART: No Potatoes

The Distillery Gallery

December 7, 2020 - January 17, 2021

Brooke Stewart: No Potatoes, looks at the floor and meats of local legend, Market Basket. Stewart explores a variety of surfaces and mediums to debut her love letter to the grocery store. Diving deeper into the individual aesthetics that together, make Market Basket an economical sanctum of holiness. Within every cathedral of grocery, there lies a prized relic. The Deli Counter. Flanked by shining beacons of reflective glass paneling protecting its sad refrigerated meats, it beckons valued churchgoers over to take a number. We wonder to ourselves, what are we ultimately here for? Sodium dense meat or something else?

The pandemic has now permanently altered the way people shop, instead of bumping carts we are now clicking 'add to cart'. Stewart observes the lines that would gather outside Market Basket, devotees waiting to shop for affordable groceries. She relates it to waiting in line to enter bars or clubs to "shop" for partners. Stewart is contemplating with the effects of waiting. What is worth waiting for? What will be left when you make it to the front? One pound of sad meat, please.
